Funeral Services at St. John's P. E. Church—Remains Taken to Rock Creek Cemetery.

Funeral services over the remains of Prof. Francis Fowler were conducted this afternoon at 2 o'clock by Rev. Roland Smith, D. D., rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, at the home of the home of the deceased, 1449 Q street northwest. Dr. Smith spoke of the life work of the dead man and of his

In announcing Professor Fowler's death to the examining corps and other employes of the patent office Acting Commissioner E. B. Moore paid a high tribute to the memory of Professor Fowler, saying: "In the death of Professor Fowler the government loses an able official, and the force of the office a sympathetic friend who was always a gen-tleman and possessed a charming person-

Professor Fowler's life was one of un usual activity, devoted to literary and scientific pursuits, requiring a high order of ability, and all who knew him during his official life of a third of a century in Washington bear testimony to the fidelity, zeal and ability ever displayed by him in the discharge of all duties committed to his care. He was born in Stockbirdge, Mass., and graduated from the University of Vermont in 1843, and, immediately after graduation. ation, he went to New York city and was engaged in literary work for many years. At the beginning of the civil war, in 1861, he was appointed chief clerk of the United States sanitary commission. He came to Washington in that year to accept that position, and remained here during the war. On closing up his work he was selected by Henry J. Raymond, editor of the New York Times and his classmate at college, as one of the associate editors. He accepted a chair in the Agricultural College of the University of Pennsylvania in 1866, becoming professor of English literature, which position he resigned in 1868 to accept a position in the hurgan of education here under Dr in the bureau of education here under Dr. Barnard, and since then he lived in this city. In July, 1869, he was appointed to a position in the patent office, and in seven years he rose to the position of principal examiner, in charge of the division of steam engineering, which position he held until his death. He filled this position, as the acting commissioner said, "with marked distinction," and his long and faithful service brought to him the respect and esteem of all who were associated with him, as well as those who had official business before him, not alone because of his sincere devotion to his duties and earnest endeavor to

PRESS COMMENTS ON THE ANNI-VERSARY EDITION.

One Happy Newspaper Family. From the Newark Sunday Call

From the Newark Sunday Call. The Evening Star of Washington, D. C., issued, a few days ago, a special number in celebration of its fiftieth anniversary. The Star is a great paper, with a beautiful ninestory building of its own and an equipment, in the way of presses and other machinery, that is scarcely surpassed anywhere in the country. This special number consists of several parts, aggregating a hundred pages or more, with a beautiful cover in several colors

In 1867 the paper was bought by four or five young men for $100,000. Two of them now publish it; namely, Mr. Crosby S. Noyes and Mr. S. H. Kauffmann. Mr. Noyes is editor-in-chief and Mr. Kauff-Noyes and Mr. S. H. Kauffmann. Mr. Noyes is editor-in-chief and Mr. Kauffmann president of the company that publishes the paper. Four younger men are associated with them, two named Noyes and two Kauffmann, and it is to be presumed they are sons of the senior members of the concern. Theodore W. Noyes is associate editor-in-chief, and Rudolph Kauffmann managing editor. The city editor is Thomas C. Noyes and the literary editor Victor Kauffmann. It would puzzle an experienced journalist to teil which family gets the better of it in this division of duties and honors. The splendid success of The Star seems to indicate that the six men make one happy newspaper family. The senior Noyes writes of the senior Kauffmann as "the brilliant, lovable 'Sam' Kauffmann, with whom, during a close association of thirty-six years, I have never had a word of discord." Now, that's fine. May the younger Noyeses and Kauffmanns be able to say the same thing at the end of a third of a century's work together. That is the best wish for the continued prospera third of a century's work together. That is the best wish for the continued prosper-ity of The Star that we can offer. It has a position in Washington that is now impregnable, and any injury that befalls it must

A Great Newspaper.

From the Grand Rapids Herald. The Washington Star has just celebrated the semi-centennial of its establishment, and no better evidence of the progress made by the newspapers in the last fifty years could be furnished than the anniversary number. The edition is in seventy-four jages of the regular newspaper size, and in jages of the regular newspaper size, and in addition a supplement of forty pages. In every respect the paper is of the highest type of newspaper art, with fine illustrations, perfect typographical appearance and artistic arrangement. The Star started as a small four-page five-column newspaper, such as might be found today in a town of 300 population. Today it is one of the great afterneon papers in the country the great afternoon papers in the country and with an influence as wide as the continent. It occupies a ten-story marble palace of its own, is perfect in all its equipments, and in many respects is a model of what a newspaper ought to be. It is enterprising, but not yellow. Its success has been won by honest, legitimate methods, and its continued success may be expected, for con-tinued success is what it deserves.

At the Head of Evening Papers.

From the Tocoma Ledger. The Washington Star is fifty years of age. It is one of the best papers published in the United States. It is by all odds at the head of the list of evening papers. A special edition, published in honor of the half century, is notable for completeness and for article fluish. and for artistic finish.

Best of Editions.

From the Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune. About the best of the special newspaper editions which have come to the Tribune office for some time is that of The Washington Star, issued on its fiftieth anniversary. It is in magazine form, and it gives a profusely illustrated history of Washing. a profusely illustrated history of Washington, in which The Star has had a prominent part. To any one interested in the national capital this edition is well worth sending Triumph in Journalistic Enterprise.

From the Wilkesbarre Leader. The Washington Star on Tuesday cele-brated the fiftieth anniversary of its pubprated the fitteth anniversary of its publication with the issue of a seventy-two-page edition in five parts of fourteen, sixteen, ten, sixteen and sixteen pages, respectively. The contrast between The Star of today and that of a half century ago is shown by the reproduction in facsimile of the first issue—a small five-column, four-page paper, somewhat crude and primitive in appearance, yet an entirely creditable publication for its time. The Star of the publication for its time. The Star of the present is one of the most enterprising and largest afternoon papers that graces the Leader's exchange list, and its anniversary number is a triumph in typographical art and journalistic enterprise. It is generously illustrated, printed on a high grade of paper and is pretty in appearance as well as commendable as to contents. It occupies its own building, of comparatively redischarge those duties with due regard to the rights of the public and inventors, but because of the unfailing courtesy that always characterized him.

The star has a much cause for self-gratulation and the Leader is pleased to tender its felicitation and the cause for self-gratulation and the Leader is pleased to tender its felicitation. upon the auspicious rounding of its semi-

Illustrates the Best in Journalism.

From the Brooklyn Standard-Union. The Washington (D. C.) Evening Star celebrated on Tuesday of last week its fiftieth anniversary, with its 15,540th number, of 114 pages, in six parts, five regular sections, including a fac-simile of the first issue, a four-page, five-column, 17½x23-inch sheet, and an illustrated magazine supplement, with colored covers, all in the highest style of mechanical art. It is a very late date to speak of the excellence of The Washington Star and of its illustration of the best principles and methods in journal-ism, but the fiftieth anniversary is a timely occasion in which to call attention to the great public services which a truly wellconducted and self-respectful newspaper renders. The Star itself, in a modest editorial, clearly sets forth its thought that "the republic would be benefited, morally and materially, by the establishment here of a worthy symbol of its greatness, by the creation of an accurate exponent of its progress and prosperity." The faithful observance of this high ideal by The Star has been abundantly rewarded, not only by physical and financial prosperity, but by that indefinable and most valuable asset—good will-of the whole country, certified by com-munications from President Roosevelt, all the Secretaries and many of the assistants. the leading senators and representatives, and many of the foremost citizens of Washington in all lines of its activity. The anniversary Star is filled with carefully prepared historical articles presenting the won-derful development of the capital in all material affairs during the last half century, covering the years of the civil war and subsequent rehabilitation, while its supplement, with a striking Chandlee frontispiece, adds many details of a more general character during the last fifty years.

An Eye-Opener.

From the Mineapolis Tribune.

The semi-centenary edition of The Washington Evening Star, which has just been received, is a marvel of efferprise, beauty and historical interest. Fifty years ago The Star arose on the hoston of the nation's capital as a five-column quarto. This anniversary edition contains 11 seven-column pages, with a magazine souvenir, and it is an eye-opener to those who have taken it for granted that Washington is not a profitable field for newspaper interprise.

A Fine Newspaper.

From the Galveston Tribune.

The Washington (D. C.) Star recently celebrated its fiftieth anniversally with a handsome sixty-page edition and colored magazine. zine supplement. It treated of the national capital and its own career since 1852, and was a gem from both literary and mechanical standpoints. The Star is a fine newspaper—bright, clean, fearless and independent
